THAILAND |

Thailand has something to offer everyone: tropical beaches, forested mountains, sleepy villages, bustling cities. All this, along with the renowned hospitality of its people, makes the 'Land of Smiles' a country to which you will want to return time and time again.

Bangkok, the capital city, is guaranteed to leave your senses reeling. For a more sedate pace of life, Koh Samui offers palm tree-fringed beaches, a mountainous interior and a turquoise sea perfect for snorkelling. Phuket also offers a plethora of sandy beaches but with world class hotels, upscale boutiques and a busy nightlife.

Hua Hin, the oldest beach resort in Thailand and a long time favourite of the royal family, is a quiet resort with seafood restaurants on stilts that reach out into the sea and a selection of world class golf courses.

Chiang Mai, the town of the north, is surrounded by hills and is home to silk factories, wood carvers and artists. Its quieter neighbour, Chiang Rai, is a sleepy town where visitors looking to avoid the crowds can visit remote villages and trek through the jungles. Not far away is the infamous Golden Triangle, the former centre of all opium poppy growing in the country.

Bangkok, the capital city, is a mix of modern and traditional where sky-high state-of-the-art office blocks, international shopping centres and elegant restaurants compete for space with Buddhist temples, rickety wooden houses and steamy food stalls.

Exquisite shrines adorned with fragrant flowers and incense sticks can be found on street corners, and in the early mornings barefoot monks in orange robes walk the city streets.

Winding its way through the city is the Chao Phraya River lined with opulent hotels and luxurious villas.

On one side of the river is the noisy bustling metropolis of Bangkok, and on the other is Thonburi where stilted houses and old temples line the banks of the many canals, and wooden boats are the main mode of transport.
